Tammy Williams
Resides in Durban.

Running one of the most popular LGBTI clubs in Durban which is called 'The Pride Of Durban' situated in Central Durban. One of the best things about being involved in the Pride of Durban is that I am able to express myself as a proud gay man. This allows others to also open up and be free to be openly Gay/Lesbian as well. As per normal we all have challenges in life unfortunately some of the challenges I face is jealousy about my success and what is sad is the fact that most of that negativity comes from my very own community. It's sad because we are meant to build one another yet we are breaking each other. I get when straight people throw judgement because they don't understand the lifestyle we live however, it hurts me most when our very own people throw judgement. My biggest hope is that the LGBTI community can come together because if we don't support one another who will? We should be united. We are a family after all.

HELP SANBS SPREAD CHEER THESE HOLIDAYS

Blood stocks fluctuate throughout the year and as we enter the festive season, the South African National Blood Service (SANBS) reminds South Africans of the importance of donating blood to aid in keeping blood stocks at safe levels.

Although the festive season is fun for most people, it is a difficult period for patients who need blood and blood products to lead regular lives.

“A large portion of our blood products are used to treat patients with chronic illnesses. With December traditionally yielding low collections, this could threaten peoples’ ability to enjoy their holidays should we not have the required blood products on hand when needed,” said Thandi Mosupye, SANBS Senior Manager: Marketing and Communication.”

To get ahead of this challenge, SANBS calls on Group O and B donors to give a unit of blood prior to setting off for their holiday destinations. “We need to collect a minimum of 3 500 units of blood, daily, to maintain safe stock levels.

“We approach this season with stocks being lower than we’d like and we could have some tough times ahead if donors do not respond to our call to lend a hand,” Mosupye added. Five (5) days’ blood stocks are required to sustain the country’s need.

SANBS is calling on all donors who are due for donation to spare some time out of their day and give the gift of life.

Each unit of blood goes a long way towards ensuring that those reliant on blood donations get to spend time with their families too.

On Tuesday, 8 November, SANBS launched the Change a Life campaign to educate donors about platelet donation. “Platelet donors are crucial in helping us to provide much needed products for the treatment of patients with blood disorders, cancer, and organ recipients.

Patients undergoing cancer treatment are highly dependent on regular platelet donations as part of their recovery,” Mosupye concluded.

The conversation about platelet donation continues on SANBS’ social media pages.

All willing and eligible donors are urged to visit their nearest mobile and fixed donor centres. With the help of donors, SANBS has been able to carry out the important task of collecting blood to meet South Africa’s needs. Each unit of blood will give a needed boost to blood collections ahead of the busiest part of the holidays. Mobile blood drives continue to run across the country and all fixed donor centres are electrified during blackouts.

Visit www.sanbs.org.za or call 0800 11 9031 to find a mobile blood drive or donor centre near you and give blood. Follow the conversation on our Twitter (@thesanbs), Facebook (@sanbs) and Instagram (@thesanbs) social media pages.

About the SANBS

The South African National Blood Service (SANBS) is a Non-Profit Organisation, which provides a vein-to-vein blood transfusion service in eight of the nine provinces of South Africa, with the exception of the Western Cape.

The organisation has a donor base of approximately 500,000. The SANBS has two testing centres; one in Johannesburg and the other in Durban which are supplemented by 7 blood processing centres around the country.

There are approximately 90 blood banks serving over 1000 hospitals and private clinics in South Africa. The organisation also offers specialised laboratory services, for example, tissue immunology, cytogenetic and proficiency testing.

The SANBS is dependent on a healthy donor population who is willing and able to donate blood and blood products to meet the blood requirements of the country.
